GAME OF TWO HALVES

What an amazing month we have had.....as a nation we were truly blessed with amazing weather for the occasion.....the singing was glorious...there was a magnificent sense that something very special was about to take place...excitement and anticipation filled the air. And what he had all been waiting to happen for the best part of a year finally begun...the referee blew his whistle and pretty much straight away Chelsea were on the attack...

Sorry, what did you think I was talking about?

The Royal Wedding! Yes, that was ok too... caught the highlights of the Wedding of the Day ☺

Yes, in all seriousness The Royal Wedding was a huge thing. Royal Weddings are always rightly celebrated but this one felt different. This one I think really captured the imagination of many people from many backgrounds. The mixing of cultures in a Royal Wedding and in a recent Post Brexit society made me feel good. It was so optimistic!

and while I am 100% sure that neither Prince Harry or the Duchess of Sussex would have married each other to make a statement, a statement it did make.....and as Bishop Michael Curry flamboyantly told us in his wedding talk, "love has no bounds and is a powerful force for change". This marriage has left an indelible impact on the monarchy for future generations, and for the better in my humble opinion. And as one of the most public families the world over, there is also a sense that the Royal family themselves also realise that because of this marriage, its responsibility and public image has just gone up a notch, both in importance and I'm sure, in standing.

But what can WE, the Queen's humble subjects take from this? After all, many of us have been living in a cosmopolitan society of accepted mixed relationships of varying kinds for decades and decades. Well maybe the very best we can take away from the events of Saturday is that for every horrible story we come across in the news there are also ones that bring smiles to our faces and warm our hearts. Many people from all corners of the globe were stood in solidarity rejoicing over the marriage of a mixed race royal couple who will hopefully go on to have children of their own. I think John Lennon said it best when he said love is all you need. All our lives can be a powerful force for change. The world can be a beautiful place to be in.

Rev George
